Famous Fund Raiser Could Charm Money From All

Max Abelman, retired public relations executive who specialized in fund raising, died in the Jewish Chronic Disease Hospital, of Brooklyn, after a long illness. He was 75 years old.

Mr. Abelman was executive director of the Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities from 1909 to 1923; and director of public relations of the Jewish Hospital of Brooklyn from 1922 to 1954, says the New York Times. In his career he raised funds for the Salvation Army, the American Red Cross, World War I Liberty Loans, the Boy Scouts of America, and Jewish religious groups.

Mr. Abelman was born in Jassy, Rumania, and came to the U.S. in 1902. He attended the Mechanics Institute of New York; New York University; the New York School of Social Work; and the American Institute of Banking.

In 1919, he was an important figure in a vast Liberty Loan meeting at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, at which more than $400,000 was subscribed. That was one of his first money-raising efforts and one of his most successful. He represented forty-four banking institutions at the rally.

As a fund-raiser, he could charm money from great and small. As a civic leader, he won the approbation of leaders in various fields. Borough President John Cashmore of Brooklyn called him "a community asset."

In 1954, Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine Ambassador to the U.S., presented to him a diploma of honor from the University of Manila, which made him an honorary Doctor of Humanities last year. His award from Manila was in recognition of the part he played in bringing numerous Filipino physicians and nurses to serve in American hospitals.

Mr. Abelman helped years ago, to save the Brooklyn Academy of Music from extinction by giving the impetus to innumerable fund-raising campaigns and dinners. He also was active in initiating the dedication of a place in Brooklyn in the name of the late Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Congregationalist clergyman and his friend. Part of Mr. Abelman's early career was in construction and part was as a banker, says the New York Times. He was a former assistant secretary of the Manufacturers Trust Company.

Organizations in which he was active included the Big Brother and Big Sister movements; the Library Associates of Brooklyn College; the Brooklyn Society of Etchers; and the Brooklyn Cancer Committee. He wrote the books, "His Workshop" and "Fi-

Reform Jews Urged To Impose Personal Tithe To Meet Needs

Exorbitant real-estate costs in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and other cities pose a threat to the establishment of new Reform Jewish temples as well as to the expansion of existing congregations, Max L. Koepfel, a realty man who is chairman of the Development Fund for American Judaism, said before members of the board of trustees of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, a major institution of Reform Judaism, at its newly expanded headquarters in New York at 838 Fifth Avenue.

Since the end of World War II the cost of property had risen "by as much as one hundred per cent," he cited Manhattan as an example "of how certain neighborhoods have changed with dramatic suddenness due to trends in population shifts."

The development fund was set up last December to raise $15,000,000 to meet the capital expansion and physical improvement needs of both the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion.

In calling for intensified support of the fund, Mr. Koepfel declared that in Manhattan new apartment structures "are changing the skyline daily. These new buildings bring Jewish families to new neighborhoods and are calling many back from the suburbs," he said, reports the New York Times. "Many of these people are unaffiliated due to lack of facilities and are eager for religious sustenance, which our own Reform movement can best supply. Dues paid by middle-income groups can just about sustain congregations as they are now constituted."

"There is nothing left for the building of sorely needed new temples, or religious schools, or for salaries for rabbis, teachers, and administrative assistants," he reported that the Union of American Hebrew Congregations had earmarked portions of the development fund for the establishment of new congregations.

Emil Baer, chairman of the Union's board of trustees, told the gathering of rabbinic and lay leaders that "the time has come when the million members of our 605 Reform temples must face the fact that there is grave imbalance between the rate of our growth and the funds to keep pace with our expansion. It would be dangerous indeed for the health of our movement if the body of our structure were to grow faster than we can nourish it," he said.

To meet the needs of Reform Judaism's expanding programs Mr. Baer proposed for members of congregations throughout the

Church Action Scores Groups That Fail In Brotherhood

A 3,200-word resolution that singled out racial discrimination as "one of the deplorable facts of our day" was overwhelmingly adopted by the International Convention of Christian Churches (Disciples of Christ). The 2,000,000 member Protestant body held its six-day annual assembly at the Kentucky State Fair and Exposition Center, in Louisville, Kentucky.

Its action was viewed by church spokesmen as a stinging rebuke to religious groups that profess the brotherhood of all mankind but fail to put the principle in practice.

Specifically, the resolution denounced sit-in demonstrations, urged church groups to work actively for a nation-wide pattern of open occupancy housing, and called on local congregations to move deliberately toward making their parishes as interracial in character as possible, says the New York Times. This included the employment of persons of different races.

The resolution, in effect a statement of "principles and policies" designed to guide local churches, acknowledged that the achievement of Christian race relations was "far from accomplished." It said:

"One of the deplorable facts of our day is that the fellowship of the church, expressed in a community of persons serving one another in love, is denied and perverted by discrimination based upon class distinctions of color and social status."

Dr. Perry Epler Graham, head of Bethany College in Bethany, W. Va., was elected president of the convention. Dr. Graham is known as an author and lecturer as well as an educator. He was formerly a pastor of two large congregations, University Christian Church in Seattle, Wash., and Central Woodward Christian Church in Detroit, Mich.

The resolution on race, entitled "The Role of the Church in a Multi-Racial Society" and brought to the convention by the body's Department of Christian Action and Community Service, made these additional observations:

"Voting restrictions based on class or color should be removed. A healthy, democratic community requires full political participation by all who live in it. The person denied the right to vote cannot achieve his full potential as a responsible citizen."

"While there has been general improvement over the past twenty years in the job opportunities open to persons without racial discrimination, there is no part of the nation where persons of minority racial groups can be sure that a job applicant will be judged only on his ability to handle the job."

"To remove the racial restrictions on housing we need to work toward a community-wide pattern

U. J. A. Mission Thanks Pope For War Time Aid To Jews

American Jewish leaders constituting a United Jewish Appeal mission visited Rome under the auspices of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, which is in charge of relief and rehabilitation programs for needy Jews in twenty-five countries.

The members of the mission are on a fact-finding survey of conditions in Europe and Israel, preparatory to beginning the United Jewish Appeal's fund-raising campaign for 1961, says the New York Times.

Pope John XXIII received in audience 102 Jewish leaders from the United States. They expressed to him appreciation for "the outstanding role the Church played in saving many Jewish lives in the days of the Hitler terror."

The group's greeting to the Pope was delivered by Herbert A. Friedman, executive vice chairman of the United Jewish Appeal. He read it from a hand-inscribed scroll contained in an olive-wood case from Jerusalem. Benjamin H. Swig, of San Francisco, national big gifts chairman for the United Jewish Appeal, presented the scroll to the Pope.

Pope John shook hands warmly with all the officers of the group, who were standing in the first row. Then, noticing that the full group, including the wives of some members, numbered more than 140, he threw up his hands with a gesture of helplessness.

Speaking through an interpreter, who translated his Italian into English, the Pontiff apologized for not shaking hands with everyone. "I said he would have wished to do so."

The Pope addressed the Jewish group as "Brothers, children of the same Father." The Pontiff recalled the Biblical story of Joseph, whose brothers, coming to Egypt in search of food, addressed him as strangers until finally he could not restrain himself and said: "I am your brother."

Pope John professed great interest in the work of the United Jewish Appeal and the Joint Distribution Committee. He has been

Israel Appeals For Negotiated Peace With Arab Neighbors

Israel challenged the Arab states in the United Nations to compete with her for the trade and goodwill of the new African nations. Mrs. Golda Meir, Foreign Minister of Israel, used her right of reply to deliver answers directed at Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, and Jordan, says the New York Times. She was answering what she called "absurd" statements made about her country in the General Assembly's opening debate.

One such charge, Mrs. Meir said, was that of "colonialism" in Israel's commercial dealings with Africa. It was her opinion, she asserted, "that the new states were fully capable of handling themselves." The argument that Israeli poultry exports in Africa, shipping agreements with Israel, or the presence of African trainees in Israel constituted colonialism, was ridiculed by the Israeli speaker.

"We know that is nonsense," Mrs. Meir said. "The Arabs know it is nonsense and, what is more important, the Africans themselves know it is nonsense. The leaders of the African countries are not to be frightened by meaningless slogans."

"We come to other new states in friendship and a sincere desire for constructive cooperation in building, and developing and for the sharing of experience. Let Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, and Jordan engage in healthy competition with us in this respect; let them see whether there is anything in their own experience which others wish to share with them. As long as they ask the African countries to cooperate with them only in hatred for Israel, nobody is going to be impressed."

Before Mrs. Meir took the floor, she was singled out for an attack by Musa Nasir, Jordan's Foreign Minister, according to the New York Times. He maintained, in opposing her original statement in the general debate, that the creation of a Jewish state has been "an error and an injustice."

Mrs. Meir's statement was "untrue and sanctimonious," Mr. Nasir warned the new members from Africa. In direct contradiction to what Mrs. Meir said a week earlier, he contended that "no atrocities were ever committed by Arabs on Jews." African newcomers to the United Nations would be well-advised to consider "seriously before they lend moral support to one side or the other" in this dispute, Mr. Nasir asserted.

Mrs. Meir's reply was addressed primarily to Lebanon and Saudi Arabia, but after Mr. Nasir's intervention, she included Jordan. Her answer covered a series of what were termed "fantastic accusations" made by the Arab state against Israel.

Among these were charges of expansionist policies and mistreatment of Arabs in Israel, Mrs. Meir said. References had been made during debate to Israeli schoolbooks, which were said to include territorial aims. On this Mrs. Meir said:

"These geography textbooks are non-existent. We would gladly supply any delegation with a set of our school textbooks and we invite the Arab delegations to do likewise, or we could supply some textbooks used in Arab countries. To our regret such books, per-

My Father's Deaths

BY YEMMA AMICHAI, OF ISRAEL, IN THE JEWISH FRONTIER
TRANSLATED BY ZALMAN H. SCHACHTER

It was Yom Kippur, and Papa was standing in front of me in the synagogue. I climbed on a chair in order to see him better from the back. It is so much easier for me to remember his back than his face. The back of his head never changed. His face was so mobile. When he spoke his mouth was like a dark and cavernous entrance or like a waving flag. His eyes were like butterflies, or like stamps on a letter which is always sent to a faraway place. Or his ears, which were like ships about to cast off over the oceans of his God. His face was either red or white as his hair. The wrinkly waves of his forehead were but a tiny beachhead fronting a universal sea.

All I saw then was the back of his neck. A deep furrow swept over its width, almost like a split. Although at that time I was still faraway from this country, I then saw for the first time a dry wadi, dry and deep. Perhaps Papa, too, began with such a wadi, for the rains had not yet descended and intense heat prevailed in this land, which on that Yom Kippur was not yet mine.

I now see his face on a photograph in the closet. He looks like a man who had begun to eat what looked like a delightful dish and who has just become aware of something not so nice in its flavor, and now feels disappointed. The corners of his mouth, which turn downward at its edges, testify to this. The wrinkle in his nose testifies to this; the crow's-feet at his eyes express this in sadness. I see the testimony of so many details in his face. And I see this testimony not for the sake of judging him, but rather for the sake of judging myself.

On that Yom Kippur he stood before me, oh so busy with his grown-up God. How white he was in his shroud. Beside him the whole world looked like an abandoned picnic-ground all blackened by campfire soot. As if the dancers had left and the musicians, too, and all that remained was blackened rock. Thus Papa remained, dressed in his white shroud. This then was the first death I remember.

And when they came to recite the Adoration he knelted altogether, touching the floor with his forehead. It seemed to me as if he were drinking with his forehead. I thought that perhaps his God was flowing between the legs of the table. Before he knelted, he spread the wings of his talit in order not to soil his knees. But he did not seem concerned about soiling his forehead — and then he was resurrected. He rose without separating one foot from the other. He rose and the colors of his face changed several times and again he lived, again he was mine and I climbed on a chair to see the back of his neck and the furrow on it. He was the resurrected flesh and blood.

Why do they call people flesh and blood? Flesh and blood you only see when someone is wounded or when someone is injured or dead. When people are alive all you see are other combinations: skin and eyes, a smile and a dark entrance, hands and a mouth.

I went up to the women's gallery. I just had to tell Mama about the miracle of Papa's resurrection. They had apples there with cloves stuck in them, for smelling so that the women would not faint while fasting. I am jealous of the women. I always wanted to faint, but I couldn't manage it, to be wiped from the blackboard, to step back from it all without having to be told what to do and without having to face opposition. The spiced apples were in the women's hands as was I, as is the whole ball of the earth. They kept me opposite the big clock as if to balance the time against me. They eyed me with a smoldering light yet to burn, burning up the whole skull.

From up there I saw how they undressed the Torah scrolls, how they took the white shirts off, pulled on the shoulder-strap and pulled the dress off and the poor Torah was naked. It must have felt cold.

Papa was again resurrected in the evening after the "closing" prayer. The year made a big wheel, enclosing within its walls days and seasons. What a strange game! To me sins and atonements were as yet doubled up and had one and the same face. In the evening, a moon made its rounds about the town like a shiny atonement rooster.

Papa has been dying many times. He still keeps on dying from time to time. Sometimes I am present, at other times I am not. Sometimes his dying is quite close to my table, when I work or when I write nice words on the blackboard or when I look at the multicolored countries in the atlas. There are times when I am far away when he dies, just as it was when he fought in the First World War. It is a good thing that children don't see their fathers in the war. It is a good thing that I did not have to fight in that war, otherwise we might have killed one another. He wore the uniform of Kaiser Wilhelm and I that of King George, and God put between us a distance of twenty-five years. I put his medals in the same box as my own decorations from the Second World War. There is no other place to put them. On one of his medals there are a lion and crossed swords, as if two invisible warriors were fencing in a duel. I guess that the images of wild and ferocious animals take a place of honor on emblems: lions, eagles, bulls that fight, and all sorts of other beautiful and destructive beasts. In the synagogue, too, two lions have to hold the tablets over the Holy Ark. Even our laws need wild beasts to guard and strengthen them.

One time, it was a long time ago in Germany and many years had passed since the war. Papa got dressed in a black dinner jacket on which he hung all his medals; he also put on a sparkling top hat to go to the unveiling of a war monument. All the names of the brave soldiers who had died in the war were inscribed there in alphabetical order. Where was that monument? Oh yes, now I remember: it was in the public park right next to the playground, right next to the swings and the sand-boxes. I can't remember what the monument looked like. The chances are it had soldiers raising rifles of stone under a flag of stone, with stony mothers bewailing the death of stony sons. Surely, there also were all sorts of animals of prey to remind one of the greatness of man and of generals and of emperors.

Papa died for about four years in the war. Oh, how many trenches he dug. Some people say that sweat saves blood and the blood of soldiers saves the sweat of generals, and the sweat of generals saves the sweat and the blood of factory-owners and of emperors and so it goes endlessly. All of it is an effort to save lives. Papa dug many trenches; he dug many graves for himself. Only once did he get wounded. All the other bullets and shrapnel missed their aim.

But, when Papa really died many years after that, then all those bullets and missiles which had missed him united and tore his heart all at once. Neither did he ever leave that last trench of his which others dug for him. He lived through many wars and many a time he was among those statistically dead in these wars, among the dead of the statistics of conquest.

His blood shone in him like elevator buttons. I guess this was so that death should be able to see and illuminate his body with his blood. But death didn't really press the elevator buttons of his blood and Papa didn't really die. The God in whom he believed hung over him like a white conductor and saved him, higher even than the wings of a Pegasus. He didn't mix his God into matters of war. He left Him among the laws of nature and the stars. He left Him floating above him, like a light foam upon the dark and heavy waters of his life.

Sometimes, as his duties in the service increased, Papa's body became like a tree which had cast off its leaves. Only the nerve branches remained but his whole life had wilted away. So many letters did he send. In the beginning he sent single letters, but in the course of the four years of war the letters accumulated first into small and then into bigger bundles. These bundles became as hard as stone.

Where do letters really end up? In the beginning they float lightly and white like the wings of a dove, then they get harder and all the letters turn into stone.

Then the letters are transferred from one hiding-place to another, from one box to another, from the closet to the top of the closet and from there to the attic and to some place under the rafters.

When Papa really died, he went in one jump much higher than all his letters which were kept in the attic, and when the true resurrection of the dead will take place, he will have to open up all those bundles and read his letters, for man gives off in his letters his life, blood, sweat, excrement, and poetry.

One time, he told us in a letter about some French prisoners of war who asked him for water in their language: "de l'eau." He gave them the last of the water in his canteen. From then on I could never rid myself of the memory of their call for water. At times they even come to me and ask me for water. Maybe Papa told them about me. It is difficult to say that he did because it was before I was born. But a war, doesn't it mix up people and lands and turn everything upside down making those who are lying down pictures on the wall? Anything is possible.

Once — it happened before Hitler came, just before Hitler came — that his friends invited Papa to a reunion. They wrote him a very nice letter. On top of that letter they had printed a single military symbol — a hunter's cap, the antlers of a deer, and crossed rifles. And why was this so? Because it was a battalion of fusiliers. It was a battalion which had a great and honorable tradition, an aristocratic battalion. At first they hunted rabbits and deer, and they hunted people in wartime. They didn't really hunt them; they killed them. Not because they wanted to eat them like people eat rabbits, but because they had to kill them and to break them open, so that all the flesh and blood should be seen and not hair and smiles and arms or any other pleasing combination.

Papa didn't answer the invitation. This, too, was a death, for they loved him a great deal and called him David. It was on Yom Kippur during the war that they gave him part of their rations, so that he should be able to fast afterwards, and they gathered little stars for his prayers, brief moments of quiet for his quiet applications, and Papa in his turn strengthened their spirit with his faith and his funny stories.

He kept on dying at more frequent intervals. He died when they came to arrest him because of the Nazi armband which I had found and thrown into the garbage-can. Black they were when they came to the door. These black ones broke the door open. How heavy their steps were! How frightening it was for me to see that my Papa wasn't able to protect our house and stand up against this enemy storming in. This was the end of my childhood. How was it possible for them to come in and enter our home against the will of my Papa? Perhaps if I had been bigger, I would have been able to cover Papa just as he covered me as he stepped back.

He died when they placed pickets before his store with signs reading "Arier! kauf! nicht beim Juden." He died when we left Germany in order to come to Israel. All the past years died at that moment, and when our train passed the Jewish Home for the Aged, of which Papa was one of the supporters, all the old people were leaning out and waving their white bedsheet from porches and windows. Not as a sign of surrender but to wave good-by to him. What is the difference between good-by and surrender? In either case flags or white handkerchiefs or even sheets are waved.

Yes, he died many times. He was made from all different kinds of material. Sometimes he was like iron; sometimes he was like white bread, sometimes he was like precious old wood, and all these had to die. Sometimes I saw him when his hands were like a garment covering his face, so that I might not see his face in all its nakedness. Sometimes his thoughts were heavier than his small body and he walked stooped under their weight, under their burden. At times he was as strong as telephone poles and his amazing thoughts flashed like messages through the wires. Sometimes songbirds came down to rest on them.

When Papa truly died, God didn't know whether he had died in earnest. He was used to his being resurrected again, but this time he wasn't. Several weeks before he had had a heart attack. Funny, people say "heart attack." Who attacks whom? Does the heart attack the body or does the body attack the heart? Or perhaps the world attacks both of them?

One day I came to visit him when he was lying beside a huge oxygen tank. His eyes were like broken slivers of glass at a wedding. When I came closer I heard the whisper of that huge oxygen bomb. There used to be a time when angels stood next to sickbeds and now there are bombs full of oxygen which whisper. Men in submarines and airplane pilots get oxygen. Where is Papa going? Will he go under the water or will he be lifted up? One thing is sure, he is about to leave us.

He motioned to me and I stepped close to him saying: "Papa don't talk; it'll strain you." And he said: "The cat is howling on our neighbor's roof. Perhaps it has been locked in and wants to get out." And I went over to our neighbor's and freed the cat. After that, again we heard nothing but the whisper of the oxygen. On top of the oxygen tank there was a clock measuring the pressure. All the time Papa has left is the time that there is oxygen in the tank.

My mother was standing at the door. If she had been able to, she too would have stayed like the oxygen bottle, right next to his bed and given him strength from her own life.

After that Papa got slightly better. Day by day the colors returned to his face. It was as if all the colors had fled and dispersed at the time of his heart attack; now the colors came sneaking back like refugees after a bombing. The oxygen tank was kept outside on the porch.

On the day preceding the evening of his death, they made a cardiogram. A doctor came, opened a sort of radio and connected all sorts of electric wires to Papa. If someone truly loves you, he doesn't need such a complicated instrument to examine your heart. But it isn't like this when a person is sick. The needle zigzagged on paper like a seismograph registering earthquakes, and Papa looked like a radio station, surrounded by wires and antennas. That was the day of his last broadcast and I heard it.

The doctor however said: "Oh, we are okay!" As if someone had asked whether he was okay. He took his machinery apart and showed us the zigzag. It was quite okay for a zigzag. That evening my wife and I went to see a film. After the distorted faces on the screen stopped laughing or crying, we went out into the street. My wife bought some flowers from a vendor right next to an artists' café.

Interested in relief and rehabilitation, he said, since the Hitler era and World War II, when he did everything he could to help Jews and other victims of the Nazis, says the New York Times. He was then apostolic nuncio or ambassador, in Istanbul, and became a close friend of the chief rabbi of that city.

When the Jewish mission held its final meeting before departing for Israel, Moses A. Leavitt, New York executive vice chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee, summed up the task facing the group. He said the Committee had been giving funds and technical assistance to help 500,000 Jews in fourteen West European countries, while in the Moslem countries it conducted a mass relief program for Jewish populations totalling 472,000 in North Africa and Iran.

CLASS IN COOKERY

EGG PLANT PANCAKES

Bake or broil a medium-sized egg plant until soft. Let cool. Scoop into a bowl and mash well. Add one egg, salt and pepper to taste, and a little onion juice. Add matzoh meal and flour which have been mixed together, enough to form batter for pancakes. Drop by tablespoons in hot oil and brown on both sides. Drain on brown paper. Place pancakes in saucepan and pour over the following sauce: One tin cream of tomato soup and one tin of cold water, salt and sugar to taste. Simmer over low heat for ten minutes before serving.

Mrs. William Riven.

Kimmel, Samuel Kronick, Joshua Lieberman, Samuel Levine, Mark A. Levy, Samuel Lunenfeld, Louis Miller, David Nemetz, David E. Newman, Q.C.; J. I. Oelbaum, Saul Offman, H. Olyan, Maurice Pollack, H. S. Rosenberg, Q.C.; Harry Rosenthal, Samuel Rothstein, A. D. Samuels, Philip Sheps.

Menachovsky, Harry Steiner, Rabbi S. Cass, J. Caplan, S. Harvey, L. Kronitz, Prof. A. Lerner, S. Wiseman, L. Zuker, J. Zipper (Montreal); S. L. Morantz (Winnipeg) were present.

Samuel Bronfman, national president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, who was to greet the Zionist Convention in Montreal, is in Europe, and conveyed greetings in a letter from Paris, France, to Lawrence Freiman, national president which was read at the banquet by Sol D. Granek, vice-president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, who presided at the banquet. Mr. Freiman, in his presidential address, paid tribute to the Congress, stressing cooperation with the Zionist Organization; the formation of the National Joint Fund Raising Council; the Western Cavalcade, in which Mr. Bronfman, Mr. Freiman and Dr. Nahum Goldmann participated, and the joint Missions to Israel.

At the convention banquet which was addressed by Dr. Goldmann, tributes was paid to Michael Garber, Q.C., former president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, by Mr. Bronfman.

"Michael Garber is an important public figure. He has no peers when it comes to sound judgment and sober reflection. He is one of the most unselfish men in community affairs, since he always puts his fine mind to the use of our common welfare. The marked progress of our Canadian Jewish life over the past number of years owes a great deal to the wisdom, patience, and astuteness of Mr. Garber.

"It is a great personal privilege for me to acknowledge publicly the debt which the community owes to him. His contribution has been made to the Zionist Organization of Canada for so long that perhaps no one cares to recall when his interest originated. His work with the Canadian Jewish Congress covers an equal span of years. What is of consequence is that Michael Garber has fundamentally never heard of the word retirement, and if he did, he has no choice in the matter since the community insists that he be drafted to remain as a statesman, realist, analyst, and philosopher. This is the combination of heart and mind which has made him so unique in the annals of the Canadian Jewish community. Everyone who has had the good fortune of being close to him is the richer for the experience."

Mr. Garber, in acknowledging the tribute, assured his hearers that he will continue to do his utmost for the Zionist Organization of Canada, for the Canadian Jewish Congress, and for the World Jewish Congress. Mr. Garber is the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Congress and a member of the national executive. He is the immediate past chairman of the national executive of Congress.

Nathan Gaisin, chairman of the arrangements committee for the convention, is the national secretary of the Zionist Organization of Canada and a member of the national executive of Congress. He was the chairman of the arrangements committee for the last plenary session of the Congress which was held in Montreal a year ago.

"HIDDEN FOR 1,000 DAYS"

In addition to writing 800 scripts for the BBC, Mr. Sonin has also edited several monthly and weekly magazines. MY FATHER'S DEATHS the dead! They placed a candle on the floor, much like a danger-signal on a road which is being repaired. And then the rabbi opened the book and began to whisper and at his whisper the oxygen bottle did not need to whisper anymore.

In the morning, they washed Papa in the house. Furniture was moved about and torrents of water were spilled and then they tied him up with many linen tapes. After the funeral, relatives and friends arrived, even Aunt Susannah came in from her village. Oh how glad she was to leave her hundreds of chickens and meet with friends whom she hadn't seen for a long time!

There were many opportunities for great and sorrowful weeping, of which we somehow didn't avail ourselves. Perhaps it was because he died in the middle of a story, or because all the radio stations were shut down, or because his heart needed a wider mouthpiece and his wasn't wide enough. But it was quite possible to mourn along with the wailing of the train-whistle between the narrow and embattled mountains on the road to Jerusalem. Or even in the silence like a window which has not been closed and is moving back and forth in silence.

How few gestures and expressions we have! We have pain, we have fear — we have a smile, and just a few more expressions. But it's just like the manikins in the display-windows of clothing stores. Fate sets our expressions as the window-decorator sets the expressions of these manikins. At times he will lift their hands, at times he will turn their heads one way or another, and so they will remain all the time, and so do we.

I grew a mourning beard. In the beginning it was hard and then it softened, and sometimes as I lie down I hear either shots or a tractor backfiring in one of the valleys. Papa was like one of the quarries. He gave up all his stones, and then remained empty. And now that he is dead and I am built up, he remains open and forsaken. And the woods grow around the quarry.

At times when I travel down into the valley, I see these forsaken quarries by the side of the road and they are lonely. Quarries, gravestones. I ordered a gravestone. The evening before I ordered it, I saw a girl standing next to a gravestone, tying up a shoelace that had opened. When I came closer, she fled between two big houses. I ordered a wide gravestone with a stony pillow at its head, and the stonemason asked me for dimensions, just as a tailor asks for measurements.

The graveyard is close to the border. In days of political unrest the dead remain lonely. Only soldiers are seen there from time to time. Next to Papa, a German doctor is buried but they didn't get a chance to set a gravestone for him. All they left him is a small tin tablet. Near the town one can see a tower. Such towers won't help us anymore. Only ships and water towers. They have to be big in order to fill all the houses with water, and God who is so big and so high filled my Papa altogether.

Too bad I was filled with other things and not always from tall towers either. At times the pressure is low and I am only half-filled with thoughts and dreams. A few days ago I went to the cemetery and over the grave there is a name and a quotation. The burial place of Moses isn't known to us, but his living place is known to us and even until this very day we know all about his life. Everything is topsy-turvy. Now only the burial places are known to us; the living places are neither distinct nor known. We move about, we change and we become different, but only our burial places are fixed.

As I am alone now, I continue to walk on my way and I'm developing all sorts of traits which belong to Papa, and some of the lines of his face and of his nose. Some of them I developed and some of them I leave out.

But, as I told you at the beginning, Papa still continues to die. He came into my dream; I was worried about him and I said to him: "Take your coat, walk slowly, don't talk. I don't want you to be upset. Rest up from this awful war." But I, I cannot rest, I keep going. I go on without praying. I take the Chillim, but I do not put them on my arm and my forehead, but into their little bag which I never open again.

Once I was walking along the ancient Via Appia in Rome. I was carrying Papa on my shoulders. Suddenly his head fell off and I was afraid that he might die. So I laid him down on the side of the road and I put a stone underneath his neck and went to call a taxi. At one time they used to call God to help and now they call a taxi. I couldn't find any and walked far away from where Papa was lying. After every few steps I turned to look at him and then ran again past the traffic. And so I saw him lying by the side of the road. Just his head was turning towards me, holding me back. I saw him through the ancient Arch of San Sebastian.

People were passing him; they turned to him and then continued to walk on. I found a taxi but it was too narrow and looked like a snake. I came to another taxi and the driver said: "Oh, we know him. He just makes believe that he is dead." And I turned back and I saw that he was still lying there, that it was still my Papa lying there by the side of the road and his white face was turned toward me, but I didn't know whether he was alive or not. I turned once more, and then I saw him like something very, very distant, on the other side of the gate of the ancient Arch of San Sebastian.
